Lansdowne Park plan far from done: Developers

DRAWINGS The group planning to develop Lansdowne Park said suggestions by Glebe merchants that the plan is a done deal are "erroneous and inflammatory."

On Thursday, the Glebe Business Improvement Area said they were shocked to discover detailed renderings of Lansdowne Park that were circulating in the retail community.

Yesterday, Ottawa Sports and Entertainment Group member Roger Greenberg wrote that only the plan council approves in June will count, but OSSEG must be able to show concepts of what the retail area might look like to potential tenants.

Greenberg also said the BIA's claim that the Whole Foods store would be more than 60,000 square feet is incorrect — the grand total is 36,000 square feet, he wrote.

Hundreds of faulty Tasers destroyed, retired by Mounties

WEAPONS The RCMP has destroyed or retired hundreds of Tasers after laboratory tests found some Mountie stun guns were not performing properly.

Internal RCMP notes obtained by The Canadian Press say 15 per cent of the older M26 model Tasers and one per cent of the newer X26 models did not test within technical tolerances.

Draft statistics provided by the force say that as of December, 149 M26s and 60 X26s from across the country had not performed within specifications.

The Tasers that did not meet tolerances "were destroyed and replaced by divisions," says a December briefing note to RCMP Commissioner William Elliott, released under the Access to Information Act.

In addition, the draft figures indicate several RCMP divisions had either replaced or planned to retire more than 200 other M26 stun guns.

The RCMP declined to provide additional updates, saying the force would publish the final test results this spring.

Serious questions of stun gun reliability first arose in December 2008 when a scientific review commissioned by the CBC and French-language Radio-Canada concluded that four out of 41 guns tested actually discharged more electrical current than Taser International says is possible.

In some of the test firings the police weapons delivered 50 per cent more current.

make Ottawa the focal point for Canada's 150th anniversary celebrations. He said the Junos, the Genies, the NHL's outdoor classic and the Grey Cup, should all be in Ottawa that year.

"Every major event ... will know that our city is the place to be in 2017," he said.

There are now nine candidates running for mayor. Cesar Bello has become the latest person to register for the race.

Two more candidates will be joining the race in Gloucester-Southgate. Wade Wallace, a letter carrier with Canada Post, will be registering soon, as will Bluedrop Performance Learning director Lilly Obina. Iain McCallum is also planning to join the race in Rideau-Goulbourn.

That's the vision for the city that mayoral candidate Jim Watson is pitching to residents as the broad ideals that will form the basis of his campaign platform.

Watson said more details will be released in the buildup to the Oct. 25 election. Although he entered the mayor's race in February and has been present at almost every community event since, Watson officially launched his campaign yesterday afternoon.

He plans to release his economic development strategy next week.

Watson promised to instill a new culture of frugality at city hall: "The era of $20,000 consultants studying plastic cows on roofs, or bylaws that harass gardeners in rural Ottawa or buskers in the market and cost overruns on OC Transpo bus garages must come to an end."

With regard to safety, he said policing crime is not the only solution. He said the city needs to be more creative when it comes to engaging people in more economically challenged neighbourhoods.

Watson is also looking beyond just the next term of council. He spoke at length of how he wants to

Car rally held ahead of playoff home opener

Diehard fans are sure the Senators will get past the Penguins and into the next round of the Stanley Cup playoffs. Now they're just waiting for everyone else to figure it out.

"Now that we have a win on the road, with some good coaching and good goaltending, we can win this series in seven," said Peter Begley, who channelled hockey commentator Don Cherry at a fan car rally from Scotiabank Place to city hall yesterday, where the Senators flag was raised in front of the building.

Freshly returned from his trip to China where he presented the mayor of Beijing with a Daniel Alfredsson jersey, Mayor Larry O'Brien proclaimed that all Senators playoff game days will be "ALL IN. ALL RED" days in Ottawa.

"If the big guns come out we should come out on top," said Gary Lafontaine.

"The last game was a close game. We were just off by four minutes. Unfortunately, (Sidney) Crosby took the game to us."

Carleton Place truck driver Ron Pridmore was up at 5 a.m. yesterday putting Senators decals on the side of a cab to get ready for the car rally.

Fortunately for the long-time Sens fan, the truck is painted in 1950s retro red with light brown trim.

Tour gives insight into monumental history

ATTRACTIOnS Dozens of people took a trip "around Canada in an hour" in celebration of the International Day for Monuments and Sites yesterday.

Through Monumental! — a walking tour of monuments in downtown Ottawa — the National Capital Commission aimed "to tell some stories of the key monuments in our area," said Rachel Beriault, co-ordinator for commemorations and public art for the NCC.

"We hope people will go home having learned some new things," said Beriault.

The featured monuments included the Terry Fox Monument, the Women Are Persons! on Parliament Hill and the Valiants Memorial.

"A lot of the monuments are very important to Canadian history," said tour guide Jasmin Stoffer.

"They're individuals and groups of individuals who are brave and who represent the youthful optimism that is Canada. They're all very important to the formation of Canada."

Building connections one T-shirt at a time

CRAFT Five years ago, Jeff Woodrow was working abroad when he met Megumi.

"You know how sometimes in life, you meet really great people and you know you'll never see them again," said the 30-year-old Toronto resident.

"He was going his way and I was going my way. To honour my friend, I drew his face and put it on a shirt."

Whenever he wore it, people assumed Woodrow's friend was someone famous.

"Then it occurred to me, why not just regular people wearing each other? No big name brands, just the face and the name and the country (of the person)," he said.

The Joy T-shirt Project was born. The idea is simple. Buy one of Woodrow's shirts featuring someone you don't know. Submit your own picture, which Woodrow will turn into a drawing for a shirt that someone else will buy at JoyTshirt.com.

"It's about connecting people all over, and the ultimate goal is to promote peace and equality," he said.

"Sometimes we have all these preconceived notions about people. We pass judgment about people and we don't really know them. This connects people. You think of someone else and someone you don't know thinks of you."

Joy Apparel was one of the exhibitors at the Originals Spring Craft Sale, held at Lansdowne Park over the weekend.

The show offers an opportunity for buyers to talk to the artists, said Bethany, Ont.-based jewelry artisan Lucy Almeida. "Often, people want to know how things are made before they buy. I think it adds something special to their purchase."

Canada tops list in Afghan prisoner count

Canada outstripped its NATO allies almost two-to-one in the number of prisoners it turned over to Afghan authorities in the first nine months of last year, figures prepared for the Afghan government show.

Quebec Premier and Liberal party Leader Jean Charest speaks at a Liberal party council general meeting in Saint Hyacinthe, Que., yesterday.

Charest touts true grit over backlash

POLITICS Quebec Premier Jean Charest is trumpeting his party's courage in the face of a backlash from voters angry over planned tax hikes and allegations of influence peddling.

The premier told party faithful yesterday the Liberals need the audacity to stand behind the tough decisions necessary to balance the province's finances.

But speaking at a general council meeting in St-Hyacinthe, Que., Charest made no mention of the biggest crisis swirling within the party.

Charest recently picked former Supreme Court justice Michel Bastarache to head an inquiry into the way judges are chosen in the province. The crisis was sparked by former Quebec justice minister Marc Bellemare who claimed he was pushed by Liberal party fundraisers to make certain judicial appointments during his term.

has told municipalities that all federal funding will stop cold on March 31, 2011, for projects under the Infrastructure Stimulus Fund and the Knowledge Infrastructure Program. So some cities — scrambling to put billions of dollars to work before time runs out — are trying to get contractors to agree to pay for any construction that isn't finished by the deadline, the association warns in the note posted on its website last month.

Should Ottawa vets ride for free?

InTransit

Steve Collins

here are nice ideas and good ideas. A proposal to offer free city transit passes to veterans is certainly the former, but the jury's still out on whether it's the latter.

Goodwill and respect towards Canadian vets is pretty much universal, and such gestures are gratifying, but they come at a cost.

City staff estimate that offering the passes to Ottawa's roughly 6,000 Second World War and Korea vets would result in about $250,000 in lost revenue.

This isn't an earth-shaking sum, but as transit fares continue to climb and the city mulls cuts to existing bus routes, the timing may not be ideal.

Even the Harper government, which never passes up an opportunity to show its esteem for those in uniform, has cut funding to the National Library and Archives' Lest We Forget research program, which put students in communication with veterans.

It's often worthwhile to see what other municipalities are doing, and veterans already ride for free in such places as Guelph, Waterloo and Windsor. The Toronto Transit Commission likes the idea, but first wants to figure out how to cover the program's estimated $2-million annual cost.

Edmonton has a Donate-A-Ride program, in which the city and private donors chip in to supply bus tickets to vets. Cost-conscious city staff are suggesting this charitable route might be the way to go in Ottawa.

It should also be remembered that our Second World War and Korea vets are senior citizens. As such, they already qualify for discounted seniors' passes and free rides on Wednesdays.

These initiatives, no matter how well intended, can also have unexpected consequences. Two years ago, Via Rail enjoyed mostly good reactions when it started offering free tickets to veterans and active members of the Canadian Forces during July, and half-price fares for family members travelling with them.

The company suffered a PR hit, however, when an internal memo surfaced suggesting the program had less to do with thanking the troops and more to do with stuffing empty trains with military families during the slowest travel period of the year. There were even complaints from the families of soldiers who were serving in Afghanistan and thus couldn't be here to take advantage of the special.

Still, it's a nice idea, and transit committee chair Alex Cullen will attempt to convince his colleagues that it's a good one when he presents motion in favour of vets' passes next month.

Cloud creates creative European travel

Martin Alsander

Being stuck in Europe during the Icelandic volcano revenge brings your creative side alive. How do you get home to Stockholm from Paris with airports closed, all train tickets sold out and every car rental company in Paris already emptied?

On top of that you just received instructions to pick up the CEO in Brussels and make sure he gets to Copenhagen to deliver the quarterly result today.

Working for Metro, I have always taken pride in our entrepreneurial spirit, but this was a new challenge. In desperation I called the chairman of Metro France and asked if he could lend me a car, without knowing how to return it to him. After all, we were going to Scandinavia and I was not planning to drive back to Paris again. Yes, he said. You can take my son's Smart car. Excellent, 1,600 kilometres in a Smart car!

Thinking I was doomed, I went out for lunch, where I saw another colleague parking her Lexus. I offered her a Smart car in exchange for her Lexus. But she needed the car back yesterday, she said — not knowing my plan for her car.

It was Friday noon and I called our CEO to tell him "mission accomplished."

On my way out from Paris I still had to solve the issue of getting the car back to my colleague by yesterday. I called the office in Stockholm: "Do we have any French people stuck in Stockholm?" The ash cloud co-operated: One of our employees was trying to get to Paris. Put him on a bus to Copenhagen, we'll meet him there.

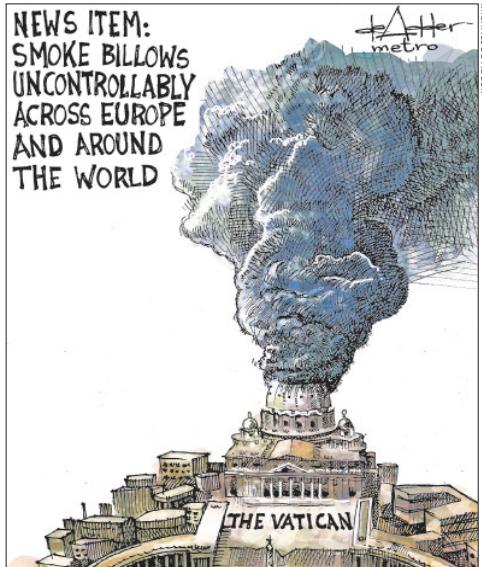

On the autobahns in Germany, our CEO was smoking heavily, talking on the phone and playing with the GPS. Around midnight, I started to get tired and asked if he could drive for a while. "Sorry," he said. "I don't have my driving licence!" We were still five hours away from Copenhagen. It was going to be a long night.

At 5 a.m. Saturday — after 16 hours on the road — I handed over the keys to our French friend in Copenhagen. Mission completed. Our CEO was in Copenhagen, I was on my way to Stockholm and the car was going to be back in Paris by yesterday.

Is it safe to fly yet? Airline officials and some pilots say the passengerless test flights show that it is. But meteorologists warn that the skies over Europe remain unstable from an Icelandic volcano that continues to spew ash capable of knocking out jet engines.

Energy efficient domed schools sparking a global revolution

BEN KNIGHT
for Metro Canada

"I want to see the world go round," says David B. South — and he's dedicated his life to making it so.

The president of the Texas-based Monolithic Dome Institute is inventor and promoter of dome-shaped schools, churches and storage facilities. Because the dome is such an efficient shape — lower surface area, less building material required — his buildings are stunningly efficient when it comes to energy conservation and holding heat.

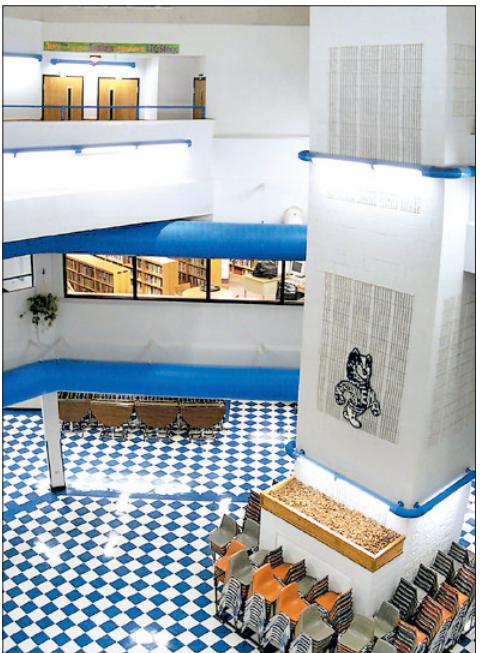

"We are at as low a price as you can build a school," the warm, slow-talking Idaho native says. "Anything that's got any architecture to it — any masonry or anything like that — we're less money."

"The buildings are greener than grass. They'll always come up gold or silver in certification. And then the fun thing is that we've now got to where FEMA (the U.S. Federal Emergency Management Agency) has recognized these buildings for their strength. One school got 95 per cent of the cost of the building from FEMA because it's also now the town's tornado shelter."

The idea is spreading across North America — and around the globe. And rather than try to maintain a monopoly on his patented construction techniques, Smith is only too happy to share his secrets with anyone who wants to learn.

"Believe it or not, I made the decision a long time ago to give this idea away," Smith says. "I have classes four times a year to teach people how to build these domes. It helps if they buy the air form from me — the outer skin, which is what they inflate to make the shape of the building — but there's nothing that says they have to."

Three floors of classrooms surround a five-storey tall atrium.

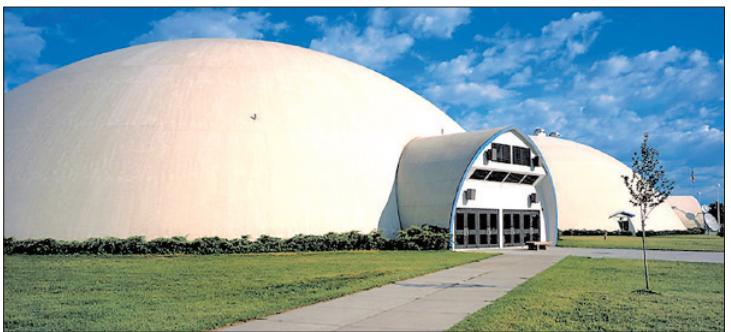

The first Canadian Monolithic Dome schools are under design, and should be coming soon. But Smith and his architecture have been up here for decades.

"I built my first dome in Canada back in '78," he fondly recalls.

"It was a potato storage over in Lethbridge, Alta. We also now make a weatherproof trans-portable cabin, and one of our biggest customers is going to be the Inuit in Arctic Canada. You can ship these up there and plant them, and you've got a building that there's nothing nature can do to hurt you."

Smith will be sharing his ideas and insights at the upcoming Green Building Expo, online everywhere May 19-20.

Based in Emmett, Idaho, this facility is the first Monolithic Dome school built.

People walk past new homes for sale in Oakville. Tighter qualifying rules take effect today to discourage homeowners from taking out mortgages they might not be able to afford.

Tighter mortgage rules kick in today

Real estate agent Marcus Caporicci calls it "creative" financing and expects to see more of it when tighter qualifying rules for mortgages take effect today.

The new rules are to discourage homeowners from taking out mortgages they might not be able to afford as interest rates start to rise to more normal levels.

Federal Finance Minister Jim Flaherty announced the new mortgage rules in February but did not change the rules affecting the five per cent minimum down payment or the 35-year maximum amortization period for a mortgage.

Almost 90 to 95 per cent of Caporicci's clients have

Changes

Under the new rules, the federal government will:

- Require homeowners to meet the borrowing standards for a five-year fixed-rate loan even if they choose variable or shorter-term loans.
- Lower the maximum Canadians can withdraw when refinancing their mortgages to 90 per cent from 95 per cent of the value of their home.
- Require a minimum 20 per cent down payment to qualify for CHHC insurance for non-owner-occupied properties.

been putting down the minimum five per cent down payment, often with the help of their families or their own credit lines.

RBC senior economist Robert Hogue said the changes to the qualifying rules are largely "tweaks" because banks have already been requiring that buyers qualify for a higher rate.

"It might raise the bar a bit ... but it's not enough to tip the market," Hogue said.

Martin Reid, president of mortgage broker Home Trust, said Ottawa has standardized what most financial institutions have already been doing.

"There will be some people around the fringe that are impacted by it, but I don't think it's a huge negative impact to the real estate market," he said.

Retailers laud new card rules

CREDIT Canadian retailers' groups are applauding a new code of conduct for credit- and debit-card companies, a move that's intended to reduce the cost of card transactions for businesses and bring more clarity to consumers.

Finance Minister Jim Flaherty said Friday that the voluntary code of conduct will be in effect within a month, and that officials were prepared to put legislation in place if the businesses don't regulate themselves.

Investors looking for hints of higher rates

CURRENCY The Canadian dollar could get a jolt upwards from the Bank of Canada's interest rate announcement tomorrow.

The central bank is expected to leave its key interest rate unchanged at 0.25 per cent, where it has been for a year now.

What traders will be looking for is a key change in wording of part of the bank's announcement. Investors will be watching for a hint that the Bank of Canada could raise rates as early as its next announcement on June 1.

NHL The morning after a thrilling comeback victory and a goaltender switch, Washington Capitals coach Bruce Boudreau was still undecided on his goalie for Game 3 of the first-round playoff series in Montreal tonight. In Saturday's 6-5 overtime win over the Canadiens, Boudreau pulled Jose Theodore in favour of Semyon Varlamov just 7:58 into the game after Theodore allowed the first two Montreal shots to go in.

Crosby nets winner

(Pittsburgh leads series 2-1)

Penguins 4 Senators 2

If the Ottawa Senators want to stay in their series with the Pittsburgh Penguins, they'll have to find an answer for Sidney Crosby.

The Penguins captain scored the game-winner in the second period and added an assist as Pittsburgh beat Ottawa 4-2 last night to take a 2-1 lead in their Eastern Conference quarter-final.

Pittsburgh also got goals from Alexei Ponikarovsky, Evgeni Malkin and Bill Guerin. Marc-Andre Fleury stopped 20 shots.

"What it came down to was execution," said Crosby, who now has seven points in three games. "(Fleury) made some big saves and fortunately for us we capi-tized on some chances. That's going to be the difference in these games here."

Mike Fisher and Matt Cullen each scored on the power play for the Senators, while Brian Elliott faced 24 shots.

"The reality is it's a race to four (wins)," said Senators centre Jason Spezza. "They've still got to beat us two more times."

With Pittsburgh leading 2-1 late in the second, Crosby fought off Ottawa defenceman Andy Sutton and lifted a shot over a sprawled out Elliott for his second of the playoffs.

"I just had some space and tried to bring it across to see what I had," Crosby said. "I had a little room, the goalie went down and had some space to put it in."

Despite a territorial advantage for big chunks of the game, the Senators were unable to capitalize on their chances, while the Penguins buried theirs.

"We're still in it," said

Fisher. "We've got another game at home here to even the series and we've got to focus on that game and not think beyond. We know what we've got to do and enjoy the challenge (of Game 4 on) Tuesday."

The towel waving sold-out crowd at Scotiabank Place was quickly silenced as the Penguins scored on their first shot when Ponikarovsky beat Elliott at 1:17 of the opening period.

"That's not the way we want to start any game," said Elliott. "I've got to have those right off the bat."

Thunder 79 Lakers 87

Pau Gasol scored 19 points, Andrew Bynum added 13 and the Los Angeles Lakers used their twin seven-footers to dominate inside against the Oklahoma City

Thunder, winning 87-79 yesterday in the opener of their playoff series.

Kobe Bryant added 21 points on 6-of-19 shooting after missing four of the final five regular-season games to rest his swollen right knee and broken right index finger.

Kevin Durant led the Thunder with 24 points — less than the 30.1 average of the NBA's youngest-ever scoring champion. Former UCLA star Russell Westbrook added 23.

Bynum returned from a 13-game absence because of a strained right Achilles' tendon, teaming with Gasol to pull down a combined 25 rebounds and deny the Thunder key second-chance baskets.

2010 National Volunteer Week says thanks for turning compassion into action

Celebrating the selfless efforts of volunteers across Canada, National Volunteer Week is here.

The weeklong event runs from April 18 until April 24 and sheds light — as well as a little well-earned praise — on all the good work volunteers do in this country.

Ruth MacKenzie, president and CEO of Volunteer Canada, says National Volunteer Week celebrates the efforts of volunteers to highlight the positive effect their work has on society.

cate their time ... They make change, they ignite movements and they just make things better for our society. People have really busy lives and just the fact that they take some time to volunteer, that's transformative to our way of life and our social fabric," MacKenzie said.

In all last year, 46 per cent of Canadians over the age of 15 volunteered their time and effort, providing 2.1 billion volunteer hours to organizations throughout Canada, proof that Canadians are no slouches when it comes to giving back to their communities.

MacKenzie says volunteering today has moved far beyond only physical help — many professionals are donating their knowledge and skills to help mentor others than ever before.

"People are realizing they want to pass on their skills they've learned during their careers to others," she said.

Will Coukell, executive director of Volunteer Ottawa, placed more than 30,000 volunteers in the city last year, an increase of 25 per cent from the previous year, and thinks the up-swing is due to greater awareness about the effects of volunteering.

"People are starting to realize that a lot of what they do in their daily lives is done by volunteers. We're all a part of the community and I think we all see the benefits of working together," Coukell said.

Dancing to a different career path

A love of ballroom, and a certain woman, sidetracked Robert Tang from his MBA track

OddJobs

Diane Peters

Metronews.ca/oddjobs

Most parents want their kids to grow up to join a respectable, well-paying profession.

But Robert Tang, now 46, was already on a successful career path, having got his MBA, when his parents sidetracked him with ballroom dancing.

The Tangs entered their first ballroom dancing competition when Robert was 25. They'd always danced for fun with friends, and his father had done lessons back in Malaysia many years before.

Tang was impressed with the event: The dancing looked fun, he liked the music and his parents made the finals. Plus, he met a dancer named Beverley that day who was looking gorgeous in a turquoise ball gown.

A few weeks later, the Tangs' dance teacher asked if Robert wanted to dance. A young dancer at the studio needed a partner her own age.

Those first few weeks were difficult. Tang struggled to master and remember the steps and keep up with his partner.

But just seven weeks later, Tang and partner Tracey did their first competition and actually did better than Tang's parents.

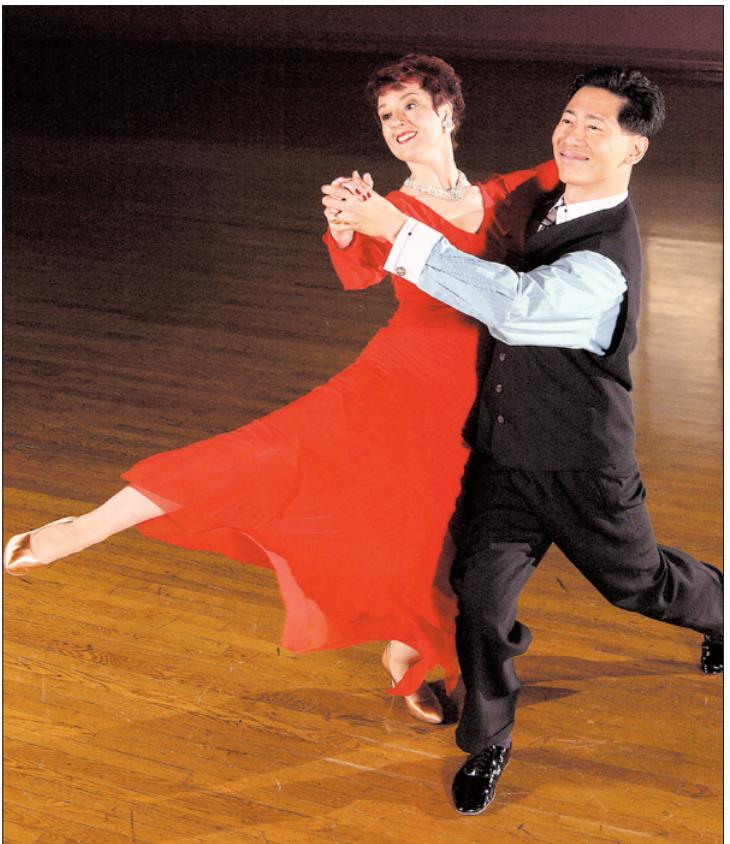

The pair moved quickly up the amateur ranks. Then Tang's teacher arranged a most appealing switch: Tracey went pro with a male dancer while Tang took a new partner. That was Beverley, whom he'd met before.

Tang and his new partner began dating and married three years later, in 1993. But life was busy. Tang had a demanding job with a software company and travelled frequently to the United States. Meanwhile, the couple flew as far away as Europe for training and all over Canada for competitions.

Their hard work paid off: they won the Canadian amateur championship three times and the North American championship twice.

After a decade of dancing in their spare time, the couple decided to make it a full time job. With the help of an investor, they started the studio DanceScape in 2000.

In the early years, Tang

Robert Tang and his wife Beverley Cayton-Tang first became dancing partners, then life partners. Now they are also business partners, running a dance studio called DanceScape.

The Internet has been a boom for many businesses but at the same time, the rise in the internet has meant that anyone can compete for business because the entrance barrier is so affordable.

The result is that major institutions are being toppled because our consumption behaviour has changed. Libraries, video stores, and broadcasters are all scrambling to figure out how to save themselves, but for many of them, it's too late.

Authors Tom Hayes and Michael S. Malone speak

Twitter is just one of the new ways companies and major institutions are trying to market themselves.

to this phenomenon from a marketing perspective and illustrate how technology has shifted, how the public consumes marketing or more specifically, and how consumers simply don't respond to the old style generic mass advertising model.

"Before mass media trained us to think and act alike, people marketed their wares directly to one another in a social context".

We are seeing resurgence in what the authors refer to as hand selling.

The abundance of these insular niche groups has made it very difficult for marketers to penetrate. But the reality is that once you have achieved buy-in from the group, these consumers will prove to be very lucrative to hold.

A very interesting read, though sometimes a bit academic. If you haven't figured out how to become a niche player, pencil it in.

Small businesses seek pension help

Business owners seeking to hire the best and brightest employees compete to offer great work environments, opportunities and benefits. But some small business owners in Canada who would like to offer pension and retirement savings plans to their employees are challenged by the complexity and costs of running such a program.

Already more than 50 per cent of Canadians working in the private sector have some sort of group retirement savings or investing program. Increasing opportunities for the balance requires some changes to Canada's retirement savings system, according to the Canadian Life and Health Insurance Association. "We need to make regulatory changes so that company pension plans become less complex and costly to operate."

Changing the law that requires that group pension programs only be offered by a single employer to its employees is one way to help employers.

Bublé wins big at the Junos

On a weekend when a dense blanket of fog wreaked havoc in St. John's, one thing was still perfectly clear last night: Michael Bublé was the shining star of the 39th annual Juno Awards.

The Vancouver crooner nabbed a leading four trophies overall, including album of the year for his blockbuster Crazy Love, single of the year for Haven't Met You Yet and the Juno fan choice award.

"This is the best one," Bublé said from the stage. "I mean, because we talk about our managers and our companies and all that stuff but we don't talk about you enough. The fans, without you, none of this happens."

"I love you from the West Coast to the East, black, white, rich, poor gay, straight, thanks for the support. I love you."

Two Toronto hip-hop artists split much of the remaining spoils, with 23-year-old rapper Drake picking up trophies for rap recording of the year and new artist of the year and K'naan winning songwriter of the year, to go with the artist of the year trophy he earned at Saturday's gala.

"Last night, I won one of these things at the ceremony for artist of the year and I'm just as baffled as I was then," K'naan said from the stage.

"Honestly, there is no greater dream than the one that comes true in the way of a song. I feel like you couldn't really write my story any better. "K'naan here, and (I) really appreciate you Canada."

Toronto new-wave outfit Metric also became double winners, picking up group of the year honours to go with the alternative album of the year trophy they won Saturday.

"Wow, this is too much," said guitarist James Shaw as he took the stage, visibly surprised. "This has been an unbelievable year."

But this was Bublé's show. The 34-year-old entered the weekend with six nominations and left with four crystal trophies, winning one Saturday and three last night. That brings his career Juno tally to 10 awards.

The winners are...

Winners from last night's Juno Awards broadcast:

- Album of the year: Michael Bublé, Crazy Love
- Juno fan choice Award: Michael Bublé
- New artist of the year: Drake
- Songwriter of the year: K'naan
- Group of the year: Metric
- Single of the year: Michael Bublé, Haven't Met You Yet
- Rap recording of the year: Drake, So Far Gone

est high point in a sparkling year for Bublé.

Last September, his fourth studio album, Crazy Love, spent two weeks at No. 1 on the charts both in the U.S. and Canada.

RefundFun

DENISE SURETTE
for Metro Canada

Now that your tax return has been submitted and your check is in the mail — what will you do with your money?

Outside of Christmas bonus season, this is the one time of year you can to make a wish list and consider your check as free money.

For many this means shopping for the latest in electronics to beef up an existing home theatre or treat yourself to an entertainment component you wouldn't normally shell out for.

Here are a few fun ways to make your home a personal audio-visual haven, thanks to the federal government.

iPod Nano with video camera

The latest iPod Nano is the fifth generation of the tiny music marvel. Available in nine fun colours, like purple, pink, blue and green, the iPod Nano is a great way to tune out the world and make your commute or workout a pleasure. Elliot Chun, spokesperson for Future Shop says the latest version is new and improved. "One of the coolest features about the iPod Nano is its built in video camera," says Chun.

Sony Bravia 40-inch LCD HDTV

$1,200

For most people their television is the centre piece for the living room, and up-grading the crown jewel of your entertainment system is tempting. The Sony Bravia 40-inch LCD HDTV from Future Shop will give you sharp and vibrant pictures.

Samsung Home Theatre System

The Samsung Home Theatre System from Best Buy is a great way to create your own entertainment get-away. With support for Dolby TrueHD and DTS-HD Master Audio technologies, you'll be immersed in amazing surround sounds.

borrow up to $1500 instantly for as long as 30 days

The maximum allowable cost of borrowing under payday loan agreements is $21 per each $100 advanced. Cost of borrowing $100 for 14 days is $21.50. Mogo's cost per $100 borrowed is $21 for 30 days; total repayment amount is $21.

A Madonna moment

Vogue remake by Glee's 'Sue' becomes a web hit

NED EHRBAR
for Metro Canada

Jane Lynch is having quite a week. Her hit series, Glee, returned to TV last week with nearly double the ratings it enjoyed last fall, her remake of Madonna's Vogue video featured during the broadcast has become an Internet sensation and she announced she's engaged to marry her long-time partner, psychologist Lara Embry.

To top it all off, Outfest, L.A.'s gay and lesbian film festival, announced it will be honouring Lynch with its Achievement Award, to be presented in July.

"It's kind of otherworldly, to the point where I'm just kind of zen about it," Lynch told Metro at the L.A. Comedy Shorts Festival. "It's all good and I'm enjoying, and I still have to go home and feed my dogs and deal with life."

While Lynch's rendition of Vogue, performed as her

Glee character, Sue Sylvester, has become a bona fide web hit, she admits she isn't surprised.

"It sounds so arrogant," she says with a laugh. "I could see on the monitor how good it was. As we were making it, I kept making eye contact with Ryan Murphy, the director, and we kept shaking our heads going, 'Can you believe that we're doing this?'"

Vogue was just a preview for this week's episode, the hit show's tribute to Madonna. "It's a relentless episode.

You can't believe that an hour has passed. It feels like five minutes," Lynch says. "In my own un-objective opinion, it's the best hour I've seen in television."

Lynch is equally effusive when discussing her engagement to Embry. "It's lovely," she says. Of course, since gay marriage was overruled in California with the passage of Proposition 8, the pair is considering other options. "We'll go where it's legal. We have a choice of about four states," she says. "We can't get married here, but we will domestic partner, which is really a wonderful set-up. It's as powerful as marriage, with the same rights and obligations — except we don't get to call it that."

I WANT TO HATE TAYLOR, ESPECIALLY NOW THAT SHE'S STOLEN MY FUTURE HUSBAND, BUT I JUST CAN'T She may be country music's sweetheart, but Taylor Swift is one tough cookie when she hits the lanes, says Glee star Cory Monteith, people.com reports.

Monteith and the singer met up recently at a group-bowling outing in L.A., and he says she "kicked my ass."

"I'm not gonna deny this. I was just an uncoordinated mess that day and I couldn't put the ball into the pins. I couldn't do it. It was bad," Monteith tells CMT Radio Live's Cody Alan. "She just brought the A-game. And I brought the B-game."

Despite the alley-whoopin', Monteith calls Swift "a great friend of mine," and when prodded on whether he thinks the singer is a "10," he laughed and said simply, "She's pretty fantastic."

An assassination plot?

OK, WHAT IS GOING ON WITH THESE PEOPLE? NO WONDER THEY HAVE REALITY TV SHOWS, THEIR REALITY READS LIKE A BAD SCRIPT

The FBI reportedly investigated a plot to assassinate Sandra Bullock instigated by Jesse James' admitted mistress, Michelle "Bombshell" McGee, according to TMZ, though the investigation was dropped when the tip was deemed "not credible."

McGee's ex-husband, Shane Modica, told authorities he'd received a call from a Missouri man who claimed McGee had hired him to kill both Bullock and Modica, though the caller was later identified as a man who has a tendency to "lose sense of reality," according to a source.

The alleged assassination was planned before James' infidelity scandal broke.
